

The internationally recognized archaeological collections of the University of Tübingen were made available to the general public after the restoration of the castle, which took place during the years 1979–1994. After some of the historically oriented sciences with study collections dating back to the 18th century were accommodated in the castle, the new museum additionally unified its eight specialist collections. Today it forms a part of the Museum of the University of Tübingen MUT with around 70 collections.

The museum in Hohentübingen was opened in 1997 in the east and north wing of the castle. Finally, in 1998, the ethnological collection followed and was displayed in the Fünfeckturm (Pentagonal Tower). It has a separate entrance. The museum shows around 4600 exhibits, spread over 2000 square metres. It brings together artefacts from the institutes of Early and Late Prehistory, from Classical Archaeology including the numismatic post and the cast collection, from Egyptology, from Ancient Near Eastern Studies and from the Institute for Ethnology.
